Learning to learn

We understand how busy life can be, and attending Parent/Teacher Interviews may not always feel like a priority. However, being actively involved in your child's education is one of the most valuable contributions you can make.

Children notice who is present and engaged. When fathers take an active role in their learning, it sends a strong, positive message about the importance of education and support at home -particularly to our young men.

Parenting is a team effort, and when both parents are involved, it strengthens your child's confidence and success. Taking the time to understand what your child enjoys at school, where they excel, and where they may need support helps build meaningful connections and lasting impact.

A great place to start is by attending the upcoming Parent/Teacher Interviews. We would love to see you in person on Campus as these conversations are essential for building strong partnerships between home and school. If your unable to attend in person there will be an option to join via Zoom.

Please check your email for full details and work together to prioritise this important opportunity by adding it to your calendar.

Our children are always watching. Let's show them that their education matters.
